April, there had been several publicity-seeking referendum gatherings, quite apart from the special Labour Party conference. No legal restraint held back campaigning. The limit was the digestion of the British public. The newspapers quite early on decided that, while the referendum must be covered, it was something of a bore.

When the EEC referendum was announced at the beginning of 1975, the IMG's paper Red Weekly devoted itself to opposing entry. The front-page article ("No to the Capitalists' Common Market", 30 January 1975) stated that staying in the Common Market was "a life-and-death question for Britain's capitalists" and for that reason "the working class should be opposed to the Common Market".
